The firm expects that language requirements for highly regulated industries, such as life sciences and government, will continue to increase the demand for language services in 2010.

Orange County, CA - January 23, 2010 -- Global Language Solutions, Inc. (GLS), a full-service translation and interpreting company delivering language services to organizations around the globe, announces its fifteenth consecutive year of sales revenue growth. The firm, which specializes in key verticals such as life sciences, legal, financial, and advertising, attributes this continued growth to the demand for translation services by companies expanding internationally.

President of GLS, Inna Kassatkina, comments, "During a period of slow growth, companies must look for business opportunities outside of their current pipelines. Because of tougher economic conditions, they look for new markets on- and offline, be it Spanish-speaking consumers in Mexico or online customers in Japan."

Additionally, GLS also recently announced quality highlights from 2009, including achieving EN 15038 certification, the quality standard designed exclusively for the translation industry by the European Committee for Standardization Certification, and successfully passing its ISO 9001:2008 certification audit one year earlier than the required deadline. The firm also implemented a state-of-the-art web portal to streamline processes and increase transparency of project flow for its clients. And, it launched its Spanish-language website with additional languages planned for 2010.

Adds Olga Smirnova, CEO of GLS, "Although we have realized positive growth each year since GLS' inception, we are especially proud of our quality achievements during the past few months. It has been an exceptional year for our firm in terms of certifications and positioning our company as a leader in the global language services industry."

Currently in its sixteenth year of business, GLS has grown into a well-recognized language service provider. Its growth is a reflection of the company's commitment to quality and customer service. The firm expects that international language requirements for highly regulated industries, such as life sciences and government, and the explosion of online consumers globally, will continue to increase the demand for their services in 2010.
