Cockpit4u recently attended as an exhibitor at the Flight Training Show held in Le Bourget, France from the 5th till 7th of February 2010.

The conference brought together career entrants, members of flight schools and other stakeholders of the aviation sector in France. Besides being an excellent networking opportunity, the Flight Training Show also discussed key issues affecting the industry like regulations, training issues and language requirements.

"The show was very successful for us considering our main objective was fulfilled. We exhibited in Le Bourget primarily to make a presence, establish contacts within the industry and have an exchange with key players to develop business relations. We were able to give a presentation and showcase our services, meet with potential clients and leading names in the industry." says Kay Wachtelborn, Instructor at Cockpit4u.

The airline industry at large may be going through turbulent times but the mid to long term prospects for the sector are strong. Therefore the demand in well-trained pilots will increase within the next months.
