San Diego, CA, Mar 08, 2010 – California College San Diego announces online Graphic Arts program through its affiliate college, Stevens-Henager College. The employment of Graphic Designers is projected to grow 13 percent by 2018 with interactive media such as websites, mobile phones, and other technology-based media adding many new job opportunities. This growth in employment is expected to be spurred by an increase in demand from advertisers and web design companies foraging into new territories like web marketing.

Students and working professionals in San Diego looking for an exciting career in graphic arts can now pursue the online Graphic Arts and Graphic Design degree at California College San Diego through its affiliate college Stevens-Henager College. With the Graphic Arts and Design degree, students will get a chance to have hands-on experience with applications like Web Page Design, Web Animation, Dreamweaver, Photoshop, Illustrator, etc. Students will also get introduced to programming languages, computer fundamentals, and business concepts like JavaScript, Internet Management, Databases, and Marketing.

The Associate of Occupational Studies in Graphic Arts degree is a flexible online program designed to prepare graduates for entry-level positions in a fast-paced business environment. Students can learn and develop the essential computer skills as well as modern techniques. The technical prowess imparted through this program is designed to help students take their creative talent to the next level in a professional setting. Armed with a college degree in graphic design, graduates can pursue exciting careers in a variety of industries ranging from print, electronic, and interactive media to fashion, interior design, and packaging.
