CompletIT announced the release of its new corporate Web site at completit.com, built using Microsoft Silverlight. The new visually enhanced portal bets everything on its stunning appearance and unique experience, turning upside down the generally accepted corporate Web site feel and look. The Web site uses the latest advancements in Silverlight to become a showcase of the creativity, skills and out-of-the-box thinking CompletIT customers may expect for their projects. The tools offered in Silverlight helped CompletIT developers use their existing skills to create amazing consumer and enterprise applications that run across many and varied devices. “Customers come to us requesting a better, smoother and at the same time visually attractive user interface for their projects,” said Silverlight MVP and CompletIT CTO, Emil Stoychev. “By creating our own Web site using Silverlight, we wanted to showcase the huge positive impact and impressive results this technology may bring into the customers projects. Seeing is believing - by turning our first contact with potential customers into a stunning, extraordinary, visually enticing experience, we hope customers will trust our Silverlight expertise and competencies much more than if we simply wrote them down on the Web site. We also plan to entirely revamp using Silverlight the next major project in our portfolio - the popular portal for Silverlight resources from CompletIT www.silverlightshow.net. And the first step we made is already visible on www.silverlightshow.net/books.aspx. “Microsoft is happy to see partners such as CompletIT eager to use Silverlight on their own Web sites,” said Brad Becker, Director of rich client platforms and tools at Microsoft Corp. “By unveiling the corporate Web site, CompletIT is able to truly highlight their knowledge and experience of Silverlight for customers to see.” About CompletIT: CompletIT is a privately-owned software development company specialized in Silverlight-based interactive solutions, Silverlight consulting and training.
