Tutors International has reported that an increased number of affluent parents are engaging the services of a full time private tutor to help their children prepare for A-level re-sits after receiving disappointing results in the first round of A-level exam results. This continues the trend reported by Tutors International over recent years of more families choosing to educate their children with one-to-one private tuition, rather than keeping them in an elite private school. "We've had astounding success with students who received very disappointing results in the first part of their A-level course, and have turned their performance around completely," said Adam Caller, founder and senior partner of Tutors International. "I know that several of our clients have come to us via referrals, so I'm not surprised by this trend at all; parents are hearing about how we can help children to achieve after disastrous early results, and naturally want that for their own children."

When asked whether there is a particular type of student that responds well, Adam said; "We see the best results when a bright student has been let down by their school. They are told by their teachers that their work is of a high standard throughout the first year of A-levels, then they receive a shockingly bad result. This discrepancy is simply down to teachers not knowing the standard the student needs to attain, so they are unable to prepare adequately for the exams," Adam explained. "It's a horrible shock for all of the family, and dreams of entering a top university are suddenly under threat."

"We see this pattern again and again," Adam continued. "But thankfully, if the family can afford to pull their child out of the school immediately and provide dedicated full time private tuition, the situation can be remedied very quickly. That focused attention really is the best way to help a child to achieve their full potential," Adam said, "and if the student has aspirations to study at the top universities in this tough climate, this is the best way to get there."

About Tutors International

Tutors International is a worldwide organization providing experienced private tutors to work with children of all ages and nationalities. Tutors are available for full-time tutoring positions, for major support and tutoring outside school hours, or for home-schooling. Tutors International is able to source the best international tutors including multilingual travelling teachers to accompany families travelling around the world, or those whose lifestyle necessitates frequent travel, in order to maintain consistency in education in extraordinary circumstances.

Tutors International provide tutors in a wide variety of situations from helping students re-take critical exams, helping pupils with the transition of moving between international school systems, and supporting youngsters with AD/HD and dyslexia. They provide a bespoke service to find the right tutor that suits the child's needs and aspirations, and if a live-in tutor is required, it is essential that the assigned tutor is the right match for the family and fits in the environment.

Tutors International was founded by Adam Caller who has tutored students of all ages. He has received specialist training in dyslexia and Attention Deficit Disorder and is very sensitive to children's educational difficulties. He has now turned this expertise to recruiting, training and placing other tutors to help families.
