Electronic medical records (EMR) software provides solutions for healthcare providers of all kinds to reduce operating costs and increase accuracy of medical records.

Rochester, NH -- Healthcare providers are discovering the benefits of electronic medical records (EMR) to improve patient care, eliminate errors, meet compliance requirements, and reduce operating costs.

"EMR solutions for practicing physicians and clinics streamlines the complete medical practice workflow without requiring specialized computer training. The use of EMR effectively automates all the vital processes within a practice. It integrates the complete medical records process," explained Sam Pendleton of www.HemiData.com

According to Wikipedia, as of 2006 less than 10 percent of American hospitals and 16 percent of primary care physicians use health information technology, such as EMR software. The vast majority of healthcare transactions in the United States still take place on paper, a system that has remained unchanged since the 1950s.

HemiData EMR offers a web-centric medical records system that allows access to medical records from any location. Because every medical practice has different needs and priorities, the company provides a flexible EMR solution that is tailored to the needs of each practice. All EMR solutions provide access, security, and control of patient records.

Most physicians are surprised to learn that changing to a HemiData EMR solution does not require specialized computer skills. The implementation of EMR in a small or medium sized practice is simple, and easy to use for all physicians and members of the office staff. The system is user-friendly and does not require a computer geek.

Healthcare providers report that the savings obtained by making the change from hard copy records and transcription services to EMR are so significant that the cost of implementation can be recouped in just a matter of months.

"Improved patient records through the HemiData EMR solutions enables physicians to spend less time on record keeping and more time on patient care, and facilitates improved care because electronic records are more accurate," said Pendleton.
