(EMAILWIRE.COM, April 20, 2007) Beverly Hills, CA -- Sunset Gower Studios is honoring legendary motion picture and television assistant director and production manager Abby Singer, with the studio's original director's building dedicated in his name. The installation of the Abby Singer plaque will take place on the Sunset Gower lot on Thursday, April 26, at 12:00 noon, to be attended by a contingent of Director's Guild of America members and motion picture and television friends and associates, it was announced by Sunset Gower's CEO Robert Papazian.

"Abby Singer began his remarkable career right here in the production department on the Sunset Gower Studios lot in 1946, then known as Columbia Pictures Studio," stated Papazian. "We are very proud of Abby, and felt it was fitting that we honor him for his remarkable career and his worthy contributions to our industry."

Abby became famous during one of his production assignments when he purposely convinced the crew into thinking the second-to-last shot of the day was actually the last shot of the day so they would begin to wrap their department. After this action, the second-to-last shot of the day became known throughout the film industry worldwide as The Abby Singer Shot.

Names of invited guests and other participants to follow. Media invited to attend.
