RapidSolution Software has published the new Videoraptor software for Windows XP and Vista as a free demo on the website audials.com. Videoraptor finds desired music video clips for the user and enables conversion to audio files.

High-capacity mobile multimedia consoles. Where does the content come from?

Cell phones are developing into multi-function entertainment consoles. Entertainment consoles are becoming multi-functional communication solutions. The Apple iPod offers 80 GB - loads of storage space for music and videos. The cell phones from Sony Ericsson and Nokia also provide lots of entertainment, with music and videos in 320x240 resolution. After buying these high-end consoles, the customer's wallet is empty, and the search for content begins.

Videoraptor supplies mobile consoles with free video content

With the "web clips" function, Videoraptor automatically provides downloads of video clips viewed on the web. The main function, "music clips," provides unlimited entertainment with music video clips. With the currently connected portals, tens of thousands of music video clips are available to the user. In addition, the offer is constantly increasing through further connected portals.

The Web is full of freely available and legal content, which Videoraptor, a meta-search machine, tracks down and makes available to the user. The user simply enters the desired artist or song title in the "music clip" search field, and Videoraptor finds the best parts of freely-available music video clips, e.g. from MTV or other legal music portals.

Video will become audio

The video formats can also be converted to MP3, WMA, OGG or WAV audio files, so that they may be played on standard MP3 players, or be burnt on CD to be played in car stereo systems.

Technical data

Supported video resolution: 320x240 pixels. Supported video formats: WMV, MP4, MPEG4, AAC or FLV.
