TORONTO, On. - June 4, 2007 -- Investolution, (investolution.com), Toronto based research and development company that specializes on forecasting major stock market indexes with their probabilistic algorithm now launches a service to allow web publishers provide stock market forecast charts to their end users easily and free of charge.

After their official launch in April 2007, Investolution attracted a large number of investors, professional and amateur, from all over the world who frequented company's web site daily to check forecasts for Dow Jones, Nasdaq, NYSE and German DAX index. "As much as we like people visiting our web site, study old predictions, read our blog and share their thoughts with us, we also appreciate that investors enjoy their dashboards where all the information they need is laid out for their taste and the content is updated as new information becomes available" explains Investolution team. "We didn't just want to provide a simple list that links back to our web site, but we actually wanted the forecast charts to be visible and useful right where it is syndicated; be it your web browser, favorite web portal, corporate Intranet or even a commercial web site that provides relevant content".

Investolution generates chart feeds for their daily forecasts in various formats, including RSS 2.0, which can be integrated to most major web portals such as iGoogle, MyYahoo and MSN. It is also possible to subscribe to stock market forecast feeds via desktop feed aggregators. There are many applications available to incorporate RSS feeds into web pages to provide dynamic content gathered from many different sources, such as the news portals on the web. Investolution grants permission to content providers who would like to enrich their web offering by including daily stock market forecasts for major indexes. The best of all, it is completely free.

Alternative to RSS feeds, the company has also developed a Google Gadget, that can be integrated to Google's popular web portal iGoogle or be presented as part of any web page. Yet another alternative is to include daily updated URLs on any web page with almost no effort.

Technical details regarding different ways of integration can be found on the company's web site:
