Washington D.C. 6/13/07– As a gesture for multipartisan relations, 2008 Independents Libertarian Presidential Candidate Daniel Imperato has agreed to attend the 2008 NRCC (National Republican Congressional Committee) President's Dinner with United States President George W. Bush.

Tonight's dinner will take place at the Washington Convention Center at 7pm. Several key members of Congress are expected to attend along with business leaders from across the country.

Imperato, currently an independent candidate for the presidency, has reached out for several major US parties such as the Libertarians, Greens, Reform, and the Republicans.

"I believe that we must bridge the gap that exists between the American people and our government. The Democrats and Republican have lost touch with the needs and the desires of the American People. I believe that we need to bring all parties together to help revive our nation and bring back the freedoms, liberties and principles that this country was built upon," stated Imperato.

In addition, the National Republican Congressional Committee invited Imperato to serve as its Honorary Chairman of the United States House of Representatives Republican Trust.
