New York, NY - June 25, 2007 - Today, outgoing British Prime Minister met with current Catholic Pope Benedict XVI in Vatican City.

Blair held long talks with Pope Benedict XVI, with the Vatican stop on his farewell tour fueling rumors that he plans to convert to Catholicism. The two men met privately for 25 minutes, and then were joined for further talks by English Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor.

Earlier this week, reports surfaced that the United States, and Blair's close personal friend, US President George W. Bush, was going to nominate Blair to be the Middle East Peace Envoy for the Quartet of Peacemakers – the United States, European Union, United Nations, and Russia.

When i1connect learned of Blair's ambitions of Middle East peace and interreligious dialogue, someone with very similar ambitions came to mind: Daniel Imperato.

Daniel Imperato is a global expert with over 30 years of business experience. He is a Papal Knight with Honors from the Vatican, and is well versed in Christianity, Catholicism, Judaism, and Islam.

Going back several years ago, i1connect learned that Daniel Imperato wanted to create a new Ambassador post to focus on interreligious dialogue.

Imperato has been one of the world's most outspoken advocates for peace in the Middle East and for an Israeli-Palestine solution.

i1connect also learned that Imperato's international organization, The Imperato Associates, is based out of London.

Imperato visited London several times over the past year and has openly supported Tony Blair.

Perhaps a future collaboration between the two could be in the works, if it hasn't already happened.
