The historic seaport in Baltimore Maryland attracts millions of visitors each and every year. Some of the nations top hotels, restaurants, sports complexes, museums, and concert halls can all be found in Baltimore's Inner Harbor.

The term "Inner Harbor" is used on more than five million web sites. There are hundreds of thousands of online searchers trying to find more information on the Inner Harbor. Many of these searches are for hotels, restaurants, companies, surrounding attractions, or people simply interested in learning more about this legendary land-mark.

Through a series of recent developments the number one web site name related to the famous Inner Harbor is being made available for sale for the first time in over 12 years. InnerHarbor.com was originally registered in 1995. Thousands of people each month type this url directly into their web browser instead of going to a search engine like Google or Yahoo. The owner of the name has stated that the asking price is currently in the mid six figure range though he believes the name could easily be worth seven figures if the web site were built out or sold in the future.
