San Diego, CA., November 3, 2007 -- EMR Experts, Inc. announced today the launch of a new forum on their corporate website emrexperts.com. The forum (emrexperts.com/forum/) was created for existing Electronic Medical Record and Practice Management software users to share their experiences with others. The forum is categorized by vendor, making it easy to navigate and search by vendor. Users are encouraged to post both positive and negative experiences in the forum, being as specific as possible since some products work great in one specialty and poorly in others. Registration for the forum is simple and users can remain anonymous.

With an estimated 500+ Electronic Medical Record and Practice Management software vendors in the industry today the process of selecting a new software system for a practice can be overwhelming. Our expectation is that this forum will provide prospective buyers with a valuable resource on each of the major vendors to help guide them in their purchasing process. "We want to see a more educated healthcare IT buyer. There are simply too many companies out there selling non-functioning systems, providing poor support and charging exorbitant fees for post-sale products and services. We hope everyone can learn from these experiences, vendors and users alike." says John Deutsch, Co-Founder and Executive Vice President of EMR Experts, Inc.

Forums and blogs are becoming increasingly popular on the internet as they provide prospective buyers with real information about products from real users instead of relying solely on product information provided by the vendor; which is often manipulated and is often false.

The forum can be accessed by visiting this link: www.emrexperts.com/forum/
