Using EMR Software will increase medical office efficiency, says EMR Software provider, Fox Meadows (foxmeadows.com).

In a professional medical office, delivering patient information over the phone is a constant part of an office staff's day. From lab reports to appointment reminders, there are many routine calls that can eat up a large part of a medical staff's day-to-day time, and cost thousands of dollars in employee hours each year.

There are a few medical software companies out there that offer different types of medical telephony programs, yet none can provide the same great quality of software that Fox Meadows Software (foxmeadows.com) does. Fox Meadows Software has been in the medical software field since 1994, and has developed their medical software with the suggestions of their clients to help create a great software package that any medical office can use with ease. They have refined their telephony software to create an easy to use, dependable software program that will help any medical office cut hundreds of employee hours from making simple reminder phone calls.

Fox Meadows Software has two main telephony products that they offer to clients. Their ReminderPro medical software is one of the best patient calling systems on the market today. It delivers a doctor-to-patient communication through either the telephone or email to remind the patient of a future appointment. This software alone can help to cut back on employee hours spent calling reminders to patients, and can also help medical offices to reduce their no-show appointments.

Their LabRetriever offers patients an interactive way to get their lab results. This software fields routine lab calls, like those patients calling in for lab test results, and reduces the number of employee hours spent on routine calls. This software can also help to keep patient loyalty up and customer service issues down. For medical offices that use this type of telephony software, they can also help to field referrals and other areas that can pull office staff from other tasks during the day.

Fox Meadows Software offers a sample of these software packages through a demo. They also offer a custom demo through their site that will allow potential users to see and use the software to determine exactly which software packages are right for their medical offices.
