The new website will serve a dual function of presenting information on the varied services that MINES & Associates provides to prospective clients and providing additional value added services to existing clients. Existing clients, who seek added convenience and efficiency, will be able to access online documents and forms, policy information, referral processes, critical incident response (CISD), and other EAP and organizational development related material 24 hours a day 7 days a week.

As an organizational psychology firm, MINES & Associates provides a variety of services including employee assistance programs (EAP), managed mental healthcare, organizational and cultural improvement, behavioral risk management, and disease management. “The new website reflects the evolution and growth of our company since our inception in 1981 and we are excited about the prospects of future growth it will provide us”, said Robert Mines, president of MINES & Associates. “By understanding both corporate and union culture we are able to provide quality employee services all while improving on the job performance and supporting the productivity and profitability of employers. MINES has saved its corporate self-insured and Taft-Hartley Trust clients tens of millions of dollars while having over 99% satisfaction with its services.”

An employee assistance program (EAP) can be an effective management tool, can save an organization money, and can boost employee morale and productivity. The primary goal of MINES & Associates, is to provide a program tailored to meet the needs of each business. For example, assessment services provide by MINES & Associates can be integrated into an organization’s existing drug-testing program and can provide for the monitoring of employees with a drug or alcohol problem for a minimum of one year. Behavioral risk management services provided by MINES & Associates assess risks connected with workplace behaviors and provide potential solutions to reduce or eliminate these risks.

In addition to the varied EAP and behavioral risk management services, MINES & Associates also provides training and development programs and workshops in topical areas such as pro-active stress management, effective communication skills, working with imperfect people, and change management.

Employee health promotion, employee assistance programs, and utilization of other non-medical resources, when appropriate, are essential ways to combat the rising costs of employer related health care costs.
