These days installing security cameras on homes are increasingly popular because families want to keep themselves and their property away from intruders. Camera systems are available on traditional stores or can be conveniently purchased online. There are wide selection depending on your allotted budget, it depends on the brand name and additional specifications but usually a home security camera with basic functionalities at a reasonable price can get the job done.

It is said over and over that prevention is better than cure or in this case better than solving a crime committed. Installing a camera at home can protect you because it can prevent an act of crime to take place or even help authorities identify the intruders in your property.

Several family hires other people like baby-sitters to watch over their baby or the house. They can do their activities or job away from home with less worry by monitoring their house through these system.

There are several types of camera systems that you can use:

- a. Standard surveillance cameras. These are commonly used in monitoring remote locations.
- b. Home security camera systems. Can be can also be installed in a concealed place, it is installed discreetly so that people can be unaware of its installation. You can choose from indoor or outdoor systems. Before installing a security camera system outside your house or property, check the laws or regulations applied but most of the time if it is for legal and morally correct purpose, hidden security system is encouraged and implemented.
- c. Dummy cameras. If you don't have enough budget to avail a home security system, you can buy fake home security cameras and install it in a highly visible place. That should do the trick to scare perpetrators.

The price of a security camera equipment differs on the is manufacturer, the popular brands are made by Sony, Samsung, Bosch and more. They usually provide a package for Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) systems that includes cameras, monitors and recording equipment.

Be practical and invest in a home security camera because by protecting your home, you protect your family and your properties.
