Dormagen, Germany. – July 16, 2008: IT-Services Thomas Holz announced the release the ReplyButler version 2.0 today, an innovative tool that makes answering emails with Outlook more convenient and much faster. The new version features a new sidebar-based user interface and makes a big step from a simple text module tool to helpdesk application.

The new sidebar is immediately visible when you answer any e-mail in Outlook and suggests predefined text-modules that could match the e-mail you're answering. The program now features a history and a top5-list of previously used text modules and has a search function integrated in the sidebar.

Furthermore ReplyButler 2.0 has several other features to make helpdesk work more productive:

- When answering an e-mail the program inserts an addressing / greeting phrase, automatically matching the sender's e-mail in name, language and style.
- ReplyButler reminds you if you forgot an attachment
- Answered e-mails are automatically moved and sorted into the right folder

The administration of text modules is much more powerful than in many other helpdesk programs:

- All text modules are multilingual. ReplyButler automatically inserts the right language version.
- Text modules that might help are automatically suggested.
- It's possible to train each text module to appear only for certain mails.
- Text modules are stored in folder structures and can have icons

- Hotkeys can be assigned to texts and folders
