Mikogo, the free screen sharing and online meeting tool available for everyone, announces their recent user base milestone of 50,000 users along with an array of service developments. Following confirmation that a new version is soon to be released, Mikogo reports an even higher growth rate than in the past, indicating that the Mikogo Community is on the rise.

Mannheim, Germany September 16, 2008 – With the fastest growth rate ever recorded, Mikogo the free online meeting tool (www.mikogo.com), announces its 50,000 user milestone. In just six weeks 10,000 individuals have registered an account with the popular Web collaboration tool, indicating that Mikogo is gaining momentum at an ever increasing rate. However the increase in growth rate is not the only buzz flying around Mikogo, with the announcement and release of several developments to enhance and support the growing user base.

With more and more users registering for the free service, Mikogo is comfortably servicing a global market and keen to further enlarge the Mikogo Community. “It’s great to see the user base increase at such a rate, and know that so many people are satisfied with our work,” says Mark Zondler, Co-Founder of Mikogo. “Consequently we wish to cater even further to the Mikogo Community, by providing places for users and interested parties to discuss free screen sharing and show their support.”

The recently released Mikogo Blog is just one example of the growing Mikogo Community, where support for the free screen sharing tool has quickly been expressed within comments. “The new blog has been a great success with many users taking the time to comment and praise our work, as well as providing feedback on what they would like to see introduced in Mikogo’s future versions,” continues Zondler. “We’re very pleased with how the Mikogo Community is taking form. People are continually subscribing to our news feed, forum registrations are up, and there are always new fans on the Mikogo Facebook page.”

Clearly the Mikogo Community is growing and embracing their favorite free online meeting tool. Mikogo has made an appearance on dozens of blogs and tech websites, with some users even taking the time to record their own video tutorials on using the software. In order to serve such a growing global user base, Mikogo is soon to launch a new website which will later be available in several languages.

However the big announcement that everyone is talking about is when will there be a new version of the software? It was rumored that a new and even better version would be released soon, which was recently confirmed by the Mikogo Team in a blog post last week along with screenshots of the new features. Currently in the stage of beta testing, the new version of Mikogo is bound to enhance the current users’ experience even further, as well as appeal to anyone interested in the popular topic of Web collaboration.

The Mikogo snowball has definitely picked up some speed as it rapidly collects new users and makes its presence well-known in the world of Web collaboration. Now with a user base of 50,000 and a growing Mikogo Community, the growth rate can only be expected to continue as Mikogo reaches out to more and more people across the globe.
