Barcelona, February 28th, 2006:]project-open[, a provider of open-source based project management software, announces the release of Version 3.1 of]project-consulting[. The new version includes several new modules and more than 100 detail improvements from customer rollouts.

“]project-consulting[is the first open-source based project management system that allows IT companies to control the profitability of their projects” says Frank Bergmann, the founder of]project-open[.

“It is still unusual for open-source projects to deal with financial and regulatory issues, but we believe that this is part of the maturing process of OSS. This process has started with IT infrastructure and content management, is currently advancing towards databases and will finally arrive at the back-office of the corporations.”

]project-consulting[is an open-source based web project management and PSA (Professional Services Automation) solution for small and medium consulting companies focused on the efficient internal resources and knowledge management and Internet collaboration.

The]project-consulting[architecture is based on Internet technology and is designed for mission-critical applications with high scalability and a sophisticated role-based permissions system.
