Press release from: Mightier Ltd

Mightier, one of the world leaders in trading floor technology is proving once again it's commitment to client partnerships by offering a cost effective solution to licensing fees on exchange platforms. The Mightier Share Unit (commonly referred to as "Contention") offers banks an easy way to reduce monthly licensing fees by having two traders share a single trading PC.

The unit, which allows two traders to share one workstation through their individual mouse, keyboard, and monitor, also has an activity indicator that prevents each user from typing on the shared PC at the same time.

While this unit could be applied to any standard desktop PC, the real value is when combined with expensive trading platforms such as Reuters or EBS.

As with most Mightier products the Mightier MLNM Share Unit uses the Keyboard port of the connected computer to power the unit lowering energy costs, eliminating a point of failure, and freeing up those much needed outlets.

The Mightier Share Unit is small enough to fit neatly under any trading floor desk but when placed in a data centre and coupled with one of the Mightier KVM Extender Series products you can have two traders separated by up to 2,000 feet sharing the same PC!

With the economy still impacting the bottom line of all industries, cost cutting and effective purchasing is of the highest priority. The Mightier Share Unit offers banks an easy way to reduce monthly licensing fees by having two traders share a single trading platform eliminating the cost of a single user license fee.

Mightier offers both a Serial specific Contention unit as well as a PS2/USB Contention unit. Visit mightier.com for additional information
