Press release from: IT-Services Thomas Holz

Antivirus programs are indispensable in the PC world nowadays. For e-mail clients however, they can be a problem, at least when duplicates occur. The antivirus programs can often add status texts to e-mails. If the same e-mail is fetched twice, for example with another account or after the scanner was updated, a different e-mail is created. This duplicate is a big problem. It cannot be recognized because it has a different e-mail text body.

Unless you're using the new version 1.22 of 1-Click Duplicate Delete for Outlook from ITSTH. The program already has received lots of great reviews and can now automatically recognize e-mail duplicates that only differ by the signatures of anti-virus-solutions in the e-mail body text. For this, the new version was trained to recognize the text of Avast, AVG, ESET, MessageLabs, RAV Antivirus, Sophos and many others.

“We had many customers who said that they duplicate e-mails weren't found. It turned out, that the e-mails were indeed not identical, but contained some differences in the signatures of the AV programs.” explains Thomas Holz, chief developer of the software. “But that's of course a bad reason for not finding the duplicates, you can't answer that to the customer. So we researched the programs and their signatures and trained our software.” The new version 1.22 is the result: it solves the problem completely automatic. And has of course many other useful features:

- Incredible easy 1-click solution;
- Improved duplicate recognition
- Detects + removes duplicate e-mail, contact, calendar items;
- Automatic merging of duplicate contacts;

- Expert mode with presentation of details and confirmations;
- Undo;
- Great pricing: you can even suggest a price
